Global and European Multilateralism in Crisis? (MA-Seminar, IIP II; PFA, II)
Dr. Roman Novak
Mo 16 – 18 Uhr
Beschreibung
The multilateral system is argued to face three related crises. The crisis of power (since global shifts in economic and political weight appear to be eroding the multilateral system's foundations), of relevance (as the United Nations and other global organizations are struggling to deal with both old and new challenges), and of legitimacy (as emerging powers and populist movements call into question the values and goals of multilateral institutions). Namely, politicians who pledge to weaken the effects of globalization and the conduct of international organizations in favor of a stronger emphasis on national concerns, have been elected in important Western industrialized countries (e.g. the election of Trump as U.S. president and the United Kingdom's decision to leave the EU, or Brexit). Guided by the theories of International Relations such as power-based Neorealism, rules-oriented Institutionalism, and theories focusing on domestic interests and ideas such as Liberal IR theory and the Societal Approach to governmental preference formation, this seminar examines selected global (UNO, WTO, World Bank, Trump), and European (Hungary's and Poland's controversies with the EU, Brexit, the Eurozone, and the Migration and Refugee crises) empirical cases, with the aim to identify the driving forces shaping success or failure of governance in global and European settings.
